2015 KIER International Conference on ”Sustainability of Russian Economy: between Modernization and Crisis”

Organized by Institute of Economic Research (KIER),
And KIER Joint-Usage and Joint Research Project, Kyoto University

Co-Organized by The Japanese Society for Comparative Economic Systems,
And Graduate School of Advanced Leadership Studies (Shishu-Kan), Kyoto University

1. Objective of Conference

This International conference is organized by KIER and supported by The Japanese Society for Comparative Economic Studies and Graduate School of Advanced Leadership Studies of Kyoto University for the following context: In this increasingly globalized world, sustainability has been taken up a matter for discussion on international political economy within several disciplines. With growth of world economy led by emerging markets, each country sets resource acquisition for stable energy supply as a prioritized matter of national policy, which might deteriorate the priority of other environmental and preservative perspectives. Governments and their state owned enterprises in resource-rich countries, growing their nationalism, come to dominate the market and enhance political powers in global relations. One of the most typical examples is Russia and its political economy. The existence of post-socialistic countries in resource-rich ones suggests, moreover, some possibility of varieties of transition and growth pathways in the world economy. At the same time, the plenty of resources is so influential on other dimensions of its economy; environmental, energy, innovation, industrial structure, firm and labor behaviors. Taking this context into account, Russia can be one of the best subjects of research in this point while be as global players in these fields.

Therefore, this international conference has the following topic “Sustainability of Russian Economy: between Modernization and Crisis”, which tries to peruse Russia in world affairs, focusing on sustainability as innovation, firm, environment and energy in Russian economy while tracing the internationalization of its economy in this globalized world. The international conference, moreover, can provide some theoretical implications on analytical frameworks for other transitional and emerging countries. Through the international conference, we have the advanced topic on the above-mentioned subjects, and exchange our research result. English is used in the conference fundamentally.
